Dr. Roberto Zepeda Martinez, Researcher at the Centro de Investigaciones sobre America del Norte, will analyze the presidential election of 2018 in Mexico and its impact on the country's relations with United States and Canada. It will provide a prospective of scenarios once the election's results become public, in relation to relevant items of North America's trilateral agenda, such as the renegotiation of North American Free Trade Agreement, security cooperation, and migration, among others, which have been changing under the Trump administration.
